SOCIAL RESEARCH

As we move into the 21st century social workers increasingly will be called upon to advocate for clients' needs around issues of aging and health care. These issues can raise questions of ethical practice for social work professionals. This workshop will focus on professional standards and values in relation to aging and health care and will offer a process for resolving ethical dilemmas in social work practice. Issues include:

- Client self-determination and cognitive impairment
- Confidentiality in the health care environment
- Client advocacy/client best interests
- End-of-life decisions
- Professional boundaries and conflicts of interest
